DRAINAGE CONGRESS OPENS ITS SESSIONS

Administration Finds Commoner's Forces Stronger Than Expected.

CAIRO, Ill., Jan. 19.—The National Drainage Congress, advocating national legislation for flood protection and reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands, begins a three-day convention at Cairo this afternoon. This is the sixth annual meeting of the congress since its organization in Chicago in December, 1911.

The president of the congress, E. J. Watson, of Columbia, S. C., state commissioner of agriculture, commerce and industries, will be unable to attend, and the meeting will be presided over by the first vice president, Frank B. Knight, of Chicago. Edmund T. Perkins, of Chicago, formerly of the United States reclamation service, is chairman of the committee on arrangements.

The meeting this afternoon will hear addresses of welcome by Mayor Wood, Vice President Knight and Governor Edward F. Dunne, of Illinois. Thomas H. Farmer, of Martin, Tenn., will then discuss "How Can the Mississippi River be Improved to Secure the Best Facilities for Commerce and Drainage." Tonight there will be a smoker, preceded by two illustrated addresses; one on the work of the Pittsburg flood commission by E. K. Morse, engineer of that commission; and one on the Mississippi river and its control, by J. K. Melton, of Chicago, photographer for the Illinois Central railroad.

Thursday will be the big day of the meeting. What is expected to be the keynote of the congress will be sounded by F. H. Newell, formerly director of the United States reclamation service and now head of the civil engineering department of the University of Illinois, in his address on "Federal Legislation."

"The Relation of Drainage and Flood Control" will be the subject of an address by Arthur L. Webster, municipal engineer of Wheaton, Ill. Edward F. Bohm, of Cleveland, member of the Ohio state legislature, will discuss the Ohio conservancy act and state legislation. "The Legislative Aspects of Drainage" will be the subject of T. R. Ely, member of the Missouri state senate, of Kennett, Mo., and the Missouri river between Kansas City and St. Louis will be described by Clark E. Jacoby, of Kansas City. John T. Stewart, professor of agricultural engineering of the University of Minnesota will deliver an address on "Farm Drainage." S. H. McCrory, chief of the division of drainage investigation, of the federal department of agriculture, will discuss the work of his division and Paul M. Brown, editor of the St. Louis Republic will conclude the morning session.

At the afternoon session S. M. Woodward, consulting engineer of the Dayton flood commission and W. K.

Hatt, professor of civil engineering at Purdue University, Lafayette, will discuss flood protection. J. L. Van Ornum, professor of civil engineering of Washington University, St. Louis, will speak of the relation of land drainage to the improvement of rivers for navigation. R. B. Oliver, Jr. of Cape Girardeau, Mo., attorney for the Little river drainage district, will tell how to meet the organization expenses of a drainage district. Thursday evening the illustrated lectures will be repeated.

Nearly all of the session Friday morning will be devoted to the business affairs of the congress and following adjournment at noon, the delegates will be taken on an excursion about the several drainage districts along the Mississippi and Ohio river near Cairo.
